

A place to belong.

A LOVE THAT LASTS FOREVER.

before you meet us

A few things you should know before you turn the page.

We laugh a lot. We believe homemade brownies taste better when someone sneaks a chocolate chip before they go into the oven.

Our passports have collected a few stamps, but somehow our favorite destination is still home. Christmas is our favorite season, and yes the decorations occasionally appear a little earlier than most people think they should.

Our dogs believe every visitor came to see them. If someone asks, "what do you think is outside the universe?" there is a very good chance dinner is about to last another hour.

We believe hugs solve more problems than people realize that God comes first, family comes next, and everything else has a way of working itself out.

Adventure is our love language.

most of all, we believe childhood should be filled with laughter, wonder, adventure, bedtime stories, birthday candles, traditions, and knowing without ever having to wonder that you are deeply loved.

If that sounds like your kind of family... welcome.

We're so happy you're here.

hi! we're Adyol & Kai

We're a mother-and-son duo who genuinely enjoy doing life together. You won't find us sitting still for very long. One weekend we're baking brownies, another we're planning our next adventure, watching a Marvel movie, walking through a Christmas market somewhere in Europe, or simply spending an evening on the couch talking about life.

Some of our favorite conversations begin with science and somehow end with faith.

Kai has always asked big questions about space, the universe, and how everything works. Those conversations remind us that the world is full of wonder and that God's creation is even bigger than our imagination.

We laugh a lot.

We believe homemade brownies taste better when someone sneaks a chocolate chip before they go into the oven.

This book isn't about showing a perfect family.

We're not perfect. It's about showing a family that loves each other deeply, enjoys being together, and is excited to share that love with one more little person.

We've learned that the best memories rarely come from expensive things.

They come from ordinary moments: laughing until our stomachs hurt, cooking together, family game nights, decorating for Christmas, and coming home tired but grateful after another adventure.

Life is better with laughter, love and a little bit of adventure.

OUR STORY

*"If you asked us to describe our family in
one word, it would probably be together.
Not because we do everything perfectly
but because we genuinely enjoy doing life side by side."*

side by side
heart to heart

Our story,

 Some of our favorite memories have happened halfway around the world - walking through Christmas markets in Europe with hot chocolate warming our hands, standing beneath the Eiffel Tower, watching glaciers drift by in Alaska, laughing our way through another roller coaster at Disney.

But if we're being honest, some of our favorite memories happened in sweatpants: making pancakes on a Saturday morning, watching Marvel movies under a blanket, burning the first batch of cookies because we got distracted talking about black holes, celebrating birthdays in our own kitchen.

Our favorite destination is still home.

Over the years we've learned something really simple. The happiest childhood isn't built by one big moment. It's built by thousands of little ones: one bedtime story, one family vacation, one birthday candle, one science experiment, one hug after a hard day.

We laugh. We travel. We celebrate. We pray. We forgive. We keep showing up for one another, day after day, year after year.

And while our hearts are already full, we know they still have room to grow. Not because something is missing but because love has a wonderful way of making room for one more.

home is our
favorite place
to be

  Not through perfection. Through presence.

About Adyol

Before anything else I'm Mom. Out of everything I've done in life, that's the title I'm most proud of.

I love creating memories. Sometimes they're big, like planning a family trip across the ocean. Sometimes they're wonderfully ordinary, like baking brownies together on a weekday.

I believe childhood should be magical not because every day is exciting, but because every child deserves someone who notices the little things. Someone who celebrates loose teeth, makes birthdays feel like national holidays, throws extra marshmallows into the hot chocolate, and claps the loudest at school performances.

I also believe children should be allowed to ask questions. Lots of them. Especially the hard ones. Our dinner table has hosted conversations about everything from dinosaurs to galaxies to God.

If we're fortunate enough to welcome another child, I already know what I hope they remember: feeling safe, feeling celebrated, feeling completely loved. Because that's what home has always meant to me.

Best Big Brother Ever

If you've ever wondered what happens when curiosity, kindness, science, Star Wars, brownies and laughter all get mixed together — meet Kai.

He's the kind of person who notices things other people miss. He asks questions most adults have never even thought about. "What do you think is outside the universe?" "If time can slow down, could it ever stop?"

He attended Astra Nova and was accepted to begin college at just fourteen. We're incredibly proud of that — but if you asked what makes me proudest, I'd never mention school. I'd tell you about his heart. He's respectful, patient, funny, protective, and he notices when someone feels left out.

One thing he talks about often is becoming a big brother. Not because someone asked him to but because he genuinely wants to share life with someone else. He's already planning science projects, movie nights, cookie baking competitions, and introducing someone to Star Wars the proper way. (Yes, he has a plan.)

Our Home

CLERMONT, FLORIDA

This is our place filled with love, laughter & memories.
Built for today, ready for tomorrow, and always open to more love.

The kitchen is the heart of our home. It's where recipes become traditions, where conversations somehow last longer than the food, where birthdays begin, and where holiday cookies disappear suspiciously fast.

Outside, the pool is where summer evenings slow all the way down.

MOVIE NIGHTS

Our home theater, snacks, and very strong opinions about what we're watching.

A ROOM WAITING

Galaxies on the wall or Dolls on the shelves, there's always space for someone new.

This is more than a house. It's where our next chapter begins.

pajamas acceptable until at least noon ♡

A Saturday At Our House

Saturday mornings usually don't begin with an alarm clock. They begin with paws. Someone eventually wanders into the kitchen, music gets turned on, blueberry pancakes are discussed, brownies are suggested, and someone says "maybe both." Honestly, that's usually the correct answer.

Some Saturdays we head to a theme park or pack for another adventure. Other Saturdays we stay home—movie marathons, swimming in the pool, playing with the dogs, talking about absolutely everything. Those might actually be our favorite.

Dear Mom,

First thank you. Thank you for opening this book, for taking the time to learn about our family, and for loving your baby so deeply that you're willing to consider every possible future for them.

We can't begin to imagine everything you're feeling right now. We know this journey is deeply personal. So before anything else, we simply want to say that we see your courage, we see your love, and we admire the strength it takes to make decisions with your child's future at the center of your heart.

If we could meet you in person, we probably wouldn't talk about adoption right away. We'd invite you into our home. We'd make coffee, or hot chocolate, or dessert — because in our family dessert has a way of appearing even when nobody planned it. Somewhere between the laughter and the stories, we hope you'd simply see us for who we are. Not a perfect family. Just one that loves each other with our whole hearts.

If our paths are meant to cross, your child will never have to earn our love. It won't depend on grades, or talents, or who they grow up to become. They'll simply be loved, because they're ours. We'll be there for the first scraped knee, the first lost tooth, the first day of school, and the bedtime stories that somehow always end with "just one more."

Your child will always know their story. They'll grow up knowing they were loved from the very beginning — that their first mom made an incredibly brave and loving decision, and that two families' stories became forever connected because of them. That is something we will always honor.

We can't promise to be perfect. But we can promise to keep showing up. Every bedtime, every birthday, every ordinary day, again and again, for the rest of our lives.

With love, Adyol & Kai

to our little one

Hi, sweetheart. We've been wondering about you for a long time not in a way that feels impatient, more like the feeling you get the night before Christmas. You know something wonderful is coming. You just don't know exactly when.

We've imagined baking cookies together, bedtime stories that always end with "just one more," fireworks at Disney, and one more chair around the dinner table.

Because somehow, our hearts have already made room for you.

You won't have to earn your place. Love simply opens the door,
pulls up another chair, and says,
"we've been waiting for you."

You didn't complete our family. You expanded it the laughter a little louder, the hugs a little tighter, the holidays a little brighter, and the love somehow even greater than we thought possible.

*Welcome home.
We love you already.*

Love always — Mom, Kai, Prada & Honey
